

Pope Okays Communion for Divorcees

For four years now I have been saying that the Great Tribulation would begin in the Spring of 2014 and I pointed specifically to Holy Week because that would be the same in both the Christian and Orthodox calendars this year. And I believe Almighty God has marked this time for the beginning of the Great Tribulation with that first of the Four Blood Moons. And I've also said all along that the exact occurrence would be the taking away of the 'Daily Sacrifice' from the Prince.

Most Bible scholars will agree that indeed is the first Abomination of Desolation and it marks the beginning of the Great Tribulation. That is the second half of the Seven Years of Tribulation. However, very few understand what that Daily Sacrifice refers to. Daniel explains in his chapter 10, verse number 3: 'I ate no desirable bread and neither flesh nor wine entered into my mouth,' and that refers to the Holy Eucharist which will be taken away from the Prince, who is Jesus Christ, by the False Prophet. And we know that it's the False Prophet because Daniel continues, 'Neither was I anointed with oil' and that would indicate, in my mind anyway, a False Pope.

And one of my subscribers sent to me today a very interesting article from The Telegraph about Pope Francis allowing Holy Communion to be given to divorced and remarried Catholics which would indeed be the taking away of the Daily Sacrifice from the Prince. So let me read excerpts from this article. I won't read the whole article; I will put the link below and this is from The Telegraph and it's by Nick Squires and the dateline is Vatican City, the 23rd of April, that would be Wednesday, 2014.

And the headline is: 'Pope Francis 'Tells Sinner,' ('sinner' is in quotation marks) 'She Should be Allowed Communion'. In what would be a break from Catholic teaching, Pope said to have phoned remarried Argentine woman Jacqui Lisbon telling her 'nothing wrong in her taking Holy Communion.' Pope Francis reportedly told a woman 'living in sin' with a divorcee that she is free to take Holy Communion, in what appears to be a significant departure from Catholic teaching. Jacqui Lisbona, who is from the Pope's homeland of Argentina, wrote to the Jesuit pontiff to tell him that she had been refused Communion by her local priest, who objected to the fact that she was married to a previously divorced man.

Prohibited from marrying in church, they had instead opted for a civil ceremony. 'The priest told me that every time I went home, I was going back to living in sin,' she said. In her letter, Mrs. Lisbona, who has two teenage daughters with her current husband after nineteen years of marriage, said she was worried that if she did take Communion- perhaps in a church where she was not known by the priest- she would be 'violating' church rules. The Pope, who since being elected 13 months ago, has established a reputation for phoning ordinary Catholics out of the blue in response to letters they have sent, called her at her home in the central region of Santa Fe on Easter Monday.

He reportedly told her 'A divorcee who takes Communion is not doing anything wrong.' In a rebuke to the local priest who refused her the Sacrament, he added: 'There are some priests who are more papist than the Pope.' (I guess that's supposed to be some kind of a joke from Pope Francis.) When asked whether the remarks attributed to the Pope were correct, a Vatican spokesman told The Telegraph: 'We would neither confirm nor deny that. This was a private telephone call made by the Holy Father and we would not divulge the details.'

But the reported remarks were in line with the position taken by Pope Francis in recent months- that the Church should treat divorcees and their partners with more compassion. The remarks may indicate that the Pope, who has struck a much more inclusive tone than his predecessor, Benedict XVI, on issues ranging from homosexuality to same-sex unions, is testing the water with the intention of changing the Church's position. 'It is an issue we are discussing in the Vatican, because a divorcee who takes Communion is not doing anything wrong,' the Pope reportedly said during a conversation lasting 10 minutes.

The Catholic Church currently maintains that unless a first marriage is annulled, Catholics who remarry cannot receive Communion because they are essentially living in sin and committing adultery. (next is a reference to Cardinal Kasper) The push for a more inclusive approach towards divorced Catholics has been led by Cardinal Walter Kasper, a German theologian, who has called for 'openings and changes' in how the Church confronts the issue.'

If indeed Pope Francis goes through with this, he is definitely taking away the Daily Sacrifice from the Prince and it definitely will mark him as the False Prophet. It also marks the beginning of the Great Tribulation because he would be reducing a Sacrament to the level of a sacramental, and this is the warning I have been giving to Catholics all along. Let us all pray that Pope Francis does not tread in these waters that he is stirring up because he would be starting the Great Tribulation of the End Times.
