

YouTube Unblocks my Response to Stephen Colbert

I have some very interesting news for you and that is YouTube has unblocked my response video to Stephen Colbert, and for me, this is really amazing! About four years ago, you may remember, Anderson Cooper put me on his Ridiculist and made fun of me for pointing out all the sexual symbolism in the Denver Airport murals. And Stephen Colbert jumped on board about six months later and he attacked me on his program.

Now, I went along with this, and In fact, they sent a crew up here to interview me. And the reason I went along with it (I knew they were going to do a hatchet job on me) was because Anderson Cooper allowed me to do response videos here on YouTube. However, as soon as I posted a response video to Stephen Colbert, he blocked that video. The excuse he gave me was that Viacom, his parent company, it was their policy not to allow any copyrighted material from his program.

On the other hand, if you go on YouTube you can see his program attacking me; so I think there was something other than his excuse. They did not want what I was saying about Colbert to be on YouTube. Now, just last month YouTube sent me another notice saying that Viacom was still blocking my video and once again I responded to YouTube saying they had no legal right to block my video, even though they have million-dollar lawyers, well I didn't say that, but even though they do have a million-dollar company behind them and his attack video was seen on nationwide television and I have just a little YouTube channel, that made no difference.

They have the power of corporate media behind them but I was very surprised yesterday to discover that YouTube has unblocked my response video! I couldn't believe it! And I will put the link to it below. I would advise you to watch it now because YouTube may change their mind. Viacom may once again try to block this video so I think you will find it interesting. It's not as up to date as my other recent videos but for your information, take a look at it and let me know what you think.
